To Be Fair, Small Groups Are the Best

All of the movies you love are actually about small groups. Stranger Things. The Sound of Music. The Incredibles. Every Toy Story movie. Even La La Land.

What do these movies have in common? A small group of people figuring out life, serving something bigger than themselves while doing totally amazing things together.

The Fellowship of the Ring is wonderful until—yep, you guessed it—the small group falls apart. The moral of No Country for Old Men is that you can't escape Javier Bardem on your own. Cast Away is incredible, but you're depressed the whole time because Tom Hanks is so lonely he has to befriend a volleyball.

The Christian life ought to be thrilling and it is supposed to be lived alongside others. (Fact: The Princess Bride is based on the church community in Acts 2.) The church is God's family, and family is better when we're together.

SMALL GROUPS FAIR

- WHEN: Sunday, January 21 after the service
