More data:

Preschoolers who use screen-based media for more than 1 hour each day have been shown to have significantly less development in core brain regions involved in language and literacy.

More data:

Brain scans indicate that the more time spent on screens, the lower the child's language skills, and the less structural integrity in key brain areas responsible for language.

More data:

2-5 year olds with higher levels of screen time showed greater delays in development across a range of important measures, including language, problem-solving, and social interaction.

Genesis 2:18
